| OCA16. Anotácia výstupu v anglickom jazyku / Annotation of the output in English ⁹ Rozsah do 200 slov / Range up to 200 words | In the interwar period, Tomáš Garrigue Masaryk, the first President of the Czechoslovak Republic, was often depicted only positively; hence, he was perceived so by the general public. His admirers saw him mainly as the founder of Czechoslovakia. However, some Czech and (mostly) Slovak politicians criticized his endeavors. The paper discusses Masaryk's actions that caused the representatives of the Slovak People's Party to frown upon him. They expressed their objections not only through making various public appearances but also through publishing articles in the Party newspapers. For the purpose of the research, the analysis and comparison and contrast of the then press were used as research methods. The findings show that the representatives of the Slovak opposition groups blamed Masaryk of failure to gain Slovak autonomy despite the fact that he promised to do so and confirmed it by his signature in the Pittsburgh Agreement. |
