Shape Global Communication, Culture, and Research

This Master's programme offers in-depth expertise in English linguistics, literary and cultural studies, and professional translation and interpreting. Students gain advanced knowledge of the Anglophone world's language, history, and culture, along with critical research skills that prepare them for work in academia, international institutions, and the global job market.

Graduates are proficient in oral and written English at C1–C2 CEFR level and are ready to tackle complex theoretical and practical challenges in communication and intercultural interaction. With strong analytical, translation, and digital skills, they can creatively apply knowledge across disciplines—from comparative literature to translation management.

Our alumni pursue careers in diplomacy, public administration, media, international business, translation and interpreting, and cultural institutions. They are also fully prepared for doctoral studies and lifelong learning in a dynamic, globalised environment.
