A Gateway to Intercultural Research Excellence

The PhD. programme in English Language and Anglophone Cultures offers an advanced academic path for those aiming to become independent researchers and experts in English philology within a global and intercultural context. With specialisations in linguistics, literature, translation studies, and linguoculturology, the programme promotes cutting-edge, interdisciplinary research on the evolving role of English in today's globalised world.

Graduates of this programme are equipped to conduct original research, contribute to international scholarly discourse, and critically reflect on linguistic, cultural, and social phenomena. They are prepared to lead scientific projects, collaborate across disciplines, and engage diverse audiences—both academic and public—with insight, clarity, and ethical responsibility.

Join a vibrant academic community connected to international research networks and become a thought leader in the study of English as a global language.
